The interesting objects of ancient art which form the subject of the following memoir, were discovered by Mr. William Harris and Mr. Samuel Angell, Architects, in the course of a professional tour of Sicily, in the year 1823.

The drawings of the sculptures (with the exception of Plate viii.) were made by Mr. Harris, but his premature death having deprived him of the satisfaction which he would have had in presenting them to the public, that duty has devolved on his fellow traveller and coadjutor in the discovery, in concurrence with Mr. Thomas Evans, the brother-in-law of Mr. Harris, who, out of respect to his deceased relation, and as representing his right to the drawings, has joined in the publication.
